1	Autocomplete	We've added a new autocomplete search functionality to the service. This allows employers to easily search for other users. When an employer searches for a user, the autocomplete search will display a drop-down list of users based on the letters entered. The list will display the user's full name and job title. Deactivated users will not appear in the list. It will be available throughout NHS Jobs where employers can add or change users.	This feature allows you to easily search for other users. This will be especially helpful for organisations that have larger volumes of users.
2	Settled status	We've added a new 'Right to Work' section in the pre-employment checks stage. This means that citizens from an EU country, Iceland, Liechtenstein, Norway or Switzerland living in the UK will be required to declare their settled status in their applications. With this new section, employers can view the applicant's settled status and can compare the status to the evidence that the applicant provides. If these do not match, employers can add a note about this to the pre-employment check. When we release the next part of this functionality, employers will be able to change the status. This will mean that the evidence and status will match.	This is a Home Office requirement.
3	Don't want to offer to anyone	After interviews, employers now have the option to not offer the job to any applicants. Unsuccessful applicants will get sent an automated email. Employers can choose if they want to give their email address for applicants to receive feedback.	Employers will now have the ability to send an automated email to unsuccessful applicants who did not get offered the job.
